Gallery 3 Begins

Submitted by ckdake on Mon, 2008-12-01 18:17

Those of you that have been paying attention know that something is going on! At the Gallery Sprint a few weeks ago, we made a lot of decisions and got the ball rolling on a complete rewrite which we've decided to call Gallery 3. Development of new features on Gallery 2 has been frozen, Gallery 1 is now a completely separate project "Jallery", and the Gallery team is now busy at work on Gallery 3. It's definitely not ready to run on your website yet but we've set the ambitious goal of having a 3.0 release by February 1, 2009 and are on track to meet that goal. Read on for details of why we're doing this and what you can expect.

Cacheboy Squid 1.6

[i] [s] [n]

by adrian chadd - Fri, Jan 16th 2009 00:20 UTC

About: Cacheboy Squid is a Squid-2 deriative that aims to build on top of the Squid-2 codebase stability. The primary short-term aims of this codebase are a cleaner, better organised codebase, HTTP/1.1 support, compression support, IPv6 support, better storage, and initial threading support for certain subsystems.

Changes: Lots of restructuring between 1.4 and 1.6. This includes some initial IPv6 infrastructure work, but no working IPv6 support for now. This release fixes a critical string-related bug.
